

Carbon Literacy for Interested Organisations

- Heard of Carbon Literacy and wondering what it's all about?
- Want to become Carbon Literate?
- Want to write and deliver your own Carbon Literacy courses for your own organisation or community?

Carbon Literacy will equip you and your organisation to bring about the rapid reduction in carbon emissions required in the next few years by the climate emergency.

This course is suitable for all sectors and, in addition to covering everything you need to become Carbon Literate, will also look at how to begin creating your own course. It's also a chance to meet others who are involved in Carbon Literacy courses.

Carbon Literacy is defined as "An awareness of the carbon dioxide costs and impacts of everyday activities, and the ability and motivation to reduce emissions, on an individual, community and organisational basis."

The day will cover:

- Climate change science
- Carbon footprints
- Social equity in relation to climate change
- What you can do to act - both as an individual and at an organisational/community level
- Strategies and skills for communicating action on climate change
- A chance to reflect on the impact climate change is having and will have
- Beginning to write your own course
- How the course can be adapted for your organisation and audience

'A really useful day to pause from the day job and be a bit more creative in attitudes and ideas.'

I just wanted to say a HUGE thank you for today. The course was so informative, moving, thought-provoking and, for me, will be life changing. A lot of things I already knew have today converged with many other factors - the amazing people that were there, the time we are at, and all made for a powerful day for me personally.'

Marches Energy Agency runs book-on courses around the Midlands and can also provide inhouse courses for your organisation. For more information please contact: Caroline Harmon, Carbon Literacy Trainer: 07748 508704 / caroline.harmon@mea.org.uk
